Good Data Won't Guarantee Good Decisions

Most companies have too few analytics-savvy workers. Here's how to develop them. by Shvetank Shah, Andrew Horne, and Jaime Capellá

Global businesses have entered a new era of decision making. The ability to gather, store, access, and analyze data has grown exponentially over the past decade, and companies now spend tens of millions of dollars to manage the information streaming in from suppliers and customers. For all the breathless promises about

For all the breathless promises about the return on investment in Big Data, however, companies face a challenge. Investments in analytics can be useless, even harmful, unless employees to incorporate that data into complex decision. Our research offers a succinct to managers. At this very moment, the an odds-on chance that someone in your organization is making a poor decision on the basis of information that was enormously expensive to collect.

To help organizations measured prove employees' facilia decision making, Corporate Board created the Insight IQ, which sesses the ability to find and analyze relevant information. We evaluated 5,000 employees at 22 global companies and sorted them into three groups. "Unquestioning empiricists" trust analysis over judg and "visceral decision makers" sively with their gut, "Informed skeptics"the employees best equipped to make good decisions-effectively balance judgment and analysis, possess strong analytic skills, and listen to others' opinions but are willing to dissent. They're the kind of data-savvy workers every company should try to cultivate. However, we found that only 38% of employees, and 50% of senior

Most companies have workers. Here's how to develop them. by too few analytics-savvy

Shvetank Shah, Andrew

Horne, and Jaime Capellá

Global businesses have entered a new era of decision making. The ability to gather, store, access, and analyze data has grown exponentially over the past decade, and companies now spend tens of millions of dollars to manage the information streaming in from suppliers and customers.

For all the breathless promises about the return on investment in Big Data, however, companies face a challenge. Investments in analytics can be useless, even harmful, unless employees the incorporate that data into complex decisio. Our research offers a succinct

To help organizations measured prove employees' facilia decision making, Corporate Board created the Insight IQ, which sesses the ability to find and analyze relevant information. We evaluated 5,000 employees at 22 global companies and sorted them into three groups. "Unquestioning empiricists" trust analysis over judg and "visceral decision makers" sively with their gut, "Informed skeptics"the employees best equipped to make good decisions-effectively balance judgment and analysis, possess strong analytic skills, and listen to others' opinions but are willing to dissent. They're the kind of data-savvy workers every company should try to cultivate. However, we found that only 38% of employees, and 50% of senior
